Rural Areas

Rural areas always have a huge impact on the overall economic development of any country. In the same remote are you find that most people do not have bank accounts. By using mobile wallets people can conveniently create bank accounts without physically going to a bank branch. Mobile wallets also present transparency in a business transaction in the rural area. The increasing number of mobile and internet users in the rural area will pave ways for the use of better digital payment solution over time.

Increase in Number of Smartphone Owners

Not long ago surveys were carried out to show the growth of Smartphone ownership. Now, 4 in 10 people own a Smartphone. The number is still growing as more people are anticipated to be owners of a Smartphone.

Challenges

Regulatory Compliance

All mobile payment services need to abide by the legal requirements. This entails both the financial and consumer-based regulations. This can be a problem for new players who want to invest in a new market.

Fraud Risk

This is one of the biggest reasons why most consumers are reluctant to adapt to mobile wallets. Contactless payment presents huge unknown risk and fraud like leaked data, hacking, undetected malware, e-wallet vulnerabilities. Making the technology secure for all consumer will aid in stopping any potential financial breaches.

Low Trust in Mobile Wallets

Consumers say that the idea of using mobile wallets is good but not possible. They feel that they give up a lot of their control when using mobile wallets. A research carried out by YouGov shows that 43% of mobile users don't trust mobile wallets, 38% fear that if their phones get lost they might not be able to make any payment.

Challenges

Merchant support

Adopting to the mobile wallets is putting many merchants into the dilemma. Many merchants (from small as well as big businesses) are still resisting to upgrade to EMV standards and contactless payments. This is resulting in customers sticking to the traditional/old methods of payments (if their merchants are not accepting digital wallets/digital payments why would they adapt to them?)

Compliance

Mobile wallets need to be compliant with all legal requirements of government standards. Becoming compliant is indeed a difficult task, but it is of utmost necessity. The mobile wallet industry should take needed efforts in the best interest of customers as well as for themselves.

Compatibility

Mobile wallets need to be compatible with all the mobile models and their operating systems. The customer is the king and he is looking for a seamless and convenient way of digital transaction, it is required that compatibility should exist across all os and mobile devices.
